

Dear McDonald's,

I can't believe I'm even wasting my time writing this, but apparently, it needs to be said: Leo does not deserve a raise or a promotion. Seriously, he's getting paid $8 an hour, and for what? Bare minimum effort, an attitude like he's above everyone, and a dedication to Ronald McDonald? Give me a break. He thinks putting in extra hours makes him some kind of hero, but let's be real—he's just desperate for approval.

He might keep his area "clean," but that's just basic stuff: he should be doing that for $8 an hour anyway. As for dealing with customers, Leo barely manages to hold it together, yet somehow he thinks he's CEO material. CEO! Imagine McDonald's with this guy in charge sales would drop faster than an ice cream machine breaking down.

Sincerely, Someone Who Actually Cares